Fun...but turns monotonous

By Paul A. Dunphy

Francesco, or Checco as he is known, is unhappy with his life. He furnishes his apartment pleasantly, seems to have a lot of amorous exploits but he feels ill. His doctor, who happens to be a family friend, tells him that his problem isn't physical - it's mental. Checco begins to learn to love himself and this is where the book gets bogged down. The book begins to sound more like a testimonial at a twelve-step program.

Volo's descriptions of Checco's encounters with women are very entertaining but they tend to be small islands in a sea of self-absorbtion.
